For all friends

1. Market Psychology

- The market favors those who are not desperate for money.
- Dependence on trading income creates a psychological bias towards needing every trade to be a winner.
- Desperation leads to hope-based trading, which opponents exploit

2. Diverse Income Sources

- Having multiple sources of income reduces bias and desperation in trading.
- This allows for acceptance of losing trades as part of the process.

3. Competitiveness and Risk Management

- The market is highly competitive, with many trying to take profits quickly.
- Only engage in trading if you feel competitive enough.
- Risk only what you can afford to lose.

4. Psychological Resilience

- Protect your psychological well-being in trading.
- Capital losses can be recovered, but psychological damage can deter you and future generations from trading

5. Key Traits

- Discipline, patience, and belief are crucial for long-term

6. Trading Strategy

- Focus on monthly options or options with at least a 20-day horizon.
- Avoid weekly options for more stable trading.

Summary

- Maintain a balanced psychological approach
- Ensure financial stability outside of trading
- Be prepared to accept losses
